

CAPITAL'S BEAUTY BEFORE ART BODY

American Federation in Session at Willard.

ADVERTISERS' WORK SCORED

Severe Criticism of Those Who Persist in Ridiculous Contrasts—Following Business Session Delegates Are Guests of Thomas Nelson Page at Reception-Smithsonian Work.

Advertising art received severe criticism at the hands of Frank Alvah Parsons, director of the New York School of Fine and Applied Art, yesterday afternoon, in an address before the second annual convention of the American Federation of Arts, which opened in the morning at the New Willard Hotel.

Another matter of importance was the advocacy by Leslie W. Miller, principal of the Pennsylvania Museum School of Industrial Art, of the National School of Industrial Art, to be established in the Capital. "This," Mr. Miller said, "would place Washington in the first rank among the other cities of the world in art."

"Life is, after all, the whole thing in art," continued Mr. Parsons, "and everything that comes out of Rome is not necessary art. Advertising art, owing to its extensiveness, has grown to be one of the most important branches of art to-day, and in no other field is so much gross injustice done to art, than by these same advertising artists."

Ridiculous Contrasts.
Mr. Parsons rapped those who persist in ridiculous contrasts, such as using the same picture or ornament in advertising a breakfast food as they use in advertising a house for sale, or a coffin. The picture must be akin to the subject to serve its real purpose, he said, although it was the object of the advertising artists to first attract the attention and then to hold it.

Mr. Miller made a strong appeal for the establishment of a national school of industrial art in Washington, giving for his reasons, governmental aid and location.

Washington, as the seat of government, is the logical location for the school, he maintained, and even if the government did not respond to the demand, the local population and visitors would more than maintain the school.

National Gallery of Art.
The "Future of the National Gallery of Art" was the subject of an address by Dr. Charles D. Walcott, secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, in which he urged the establishment of a school of industrial art. In brief, he gave a history of the institution. He gave much credit to former President Roosevelt for his assistance to the Smithsonian Institution.

Following the business session, the delegates were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Nelson Page at a reception at 1755 R street.

Secretary MacVeagh, of the Treasury Department, who extended welcome to the delegates at the opening session in the morning, advocated the artistic development of Washington. He urged that the delegates attempt to educate Congress in the beautification of Washington. Washington, he declared, belonged to the nation, and it was a duty of Congress to make the Nation's Capital the greatest city in the world artistically.

Greeted the Delegates.
Thomas Nelson Page, president of the Washington Society of Fine Arts, greeted the delegates, and predicted that the United States will not lapse into darkness as regards art. He urged the artistic development of Washington along the lines advanced by Secretary MacVeagh.

Charles I. Hutchinson, president of the federation, made the annual address, and the reports of the officers were read.

The federation will meet again this morning at 10 o'clock in the red room of the Willard.

The jewelry firm of Cartier, of New York and Paris, yesterday joined issue against Edward B. McLean and his wife, Evelyn Walsh McLean, to recover $200,000, the alleged purchase price of the Hope diamond.

Counsel for the jeweler abandoned the intention of asking a special appeal from the refusal of Justice Barnard to award them judgment, and filed a joinder of issue. Application will be made early in the fall to have the case advanced for trial. It is considered probably that if counsel can agree the court will set an early date for the hearing. Pending the judicial proceedings, the diamond is in the custody of the McLeans, but it is being kept in a safe deposit vault.
